Forecasting our Future The Economic Impact of Exclusionary Zoning

People need different housing at various stages in their life. Research has shown that failing to provide a diversity of housing choices to meet these needs has a profound impact on our economy. Nationally, exclusionary zoning has drastically reduced our Gross Domestic Product (GDP) and expanded hourly wage inequality. How can anticipating future housing demand and providing the housing to meet that demand improve Connecticut's economy during a period of massive state budget deficits?

Keynote Speakers:

Dr. Daniel Shoag

Assistant Professor of Public Policy
Taubman Center for State and Local Government
Harvard University Kennedy School of Government

Shoag's research focuses on fiscal policy, state and local pension plans, and regional macroeconomics. He will present findings from his research that explores how land use regulations have impacted our economy.

Jennifer Herz
